

👤 What do La Croix, octonions, and Second Life have in common?

by JP Smith on January 2, 2019

...

This is where the name comes in. The final part was called “Holywater 2: La Croix” specifically to entice Dan “Pamplemousse” Hlavenka, a friend of mine who loves both LSL and La Croix more than any other person I know of. He was willing to help with every part of the Second Life portion, but only if we made the challenge La Croix themed in every way we could, to spread the gospel to the next generation.

Competitors were greeted by the below acrostic, which, when the blanks are filled in, describes both a location in Second Life and half-dozen La Croix flavors.

Once teams arrive, they find themselves inside a giant can of La Croix, underwater (and with particle effects for carbonation). The location in Second Life was renamed “Mud City” after LaCrosse Wisconsin, home of the beverage. They are then presented with two glowing orbs, reading “Click here for everything you need” and “Click here to die instantly.”

Read the full article here: <https://securityboulevard.com/2019/01/what-do-la-croix-octonions-and-second-life-have-in-common/>